

Jermy Domingo, DrPH

Jermy Domingo received both her DrPH in Community-based and Translational Research and MPH in Epidemiology from the University of Hawai'i at Mānoa. She began her public health career as a student intern and health educator at Kalihi-Palama Health Center in 2007. In this role, she worked as part of a team that implemented culturally responsive nutrition and physical activity programs within KPHC's diverse patient population. She then moved to 'Imi Hale Native Hawaiian Cancer Network where she coordinated and evaluated trainings for cancer patient navigators, piloted screening navigation programs, and facilitated implementation of worksite wellness programs in Native Hawaiian-serving organizations. She currently works as the Program Manager for Health Equity and Research at the Hawaii Primary Care Association (HPCA). In this capacity, she leads the development and implementation of health equity and research initiatives at HPCA, providing training and technical assistance to HPCA's network of 15 Community Health Centers (CHCs).